ABSTRACT

This directory of sources of financial aid for librarians and other staff members interested in continuing their professional training lists public library systems, state school agencies, higher education agencies, library associations in the U.S. and Canada, and federal agencies. Information provided includes the address, a contact person, funds available and their purpose, eligibility requirements, future plans for funding, and directions for application. The directory is based on responses to a questionnaire (sample provided) mailed to the institutions cited above. Where funds are available in public libraries and federal libraries, eligibility is usually limited to the staff. State school agencies generally provide aid only to residents, and, at times, target specific groups such as media personnel or administrators. Library association funding normally depends on membership. A few departments of higher education also provide some funding. (RAA)

FUNDING FOR CONTINUING EDUCATION AVAILABLE TO INDIVIDUALS IN THE FIELD OF LIBRARIANSHIP

INTRODUCTION

Continuing education for librarians is a growing phenomenon. Workshops, seminars, conferences and institutes for practitioners abound and a great deal of literature is readily available regarding these courses. There is no question that if an individual is interested in taking a continuing education course he or she will not encounter too much difficulty in discovering what is being offered.

Where he or she can go for financial assistance, however, is not as readily publicized. Opportunities for grants to individuals for continuing education exist and oftentimes go untapped because few practitioners are aware of what funds have been set aside and which institutions provide such financial help.

In April 1979 a questionaire survey was undertaken by the Subcommittee on Funding, Continuing Education Task Force, Library Instruction Roundtable (LIRT), American Library Association, for the purpose of identifying sources of funding available to individuals interested in enrolling in continuing education courses on a nationwide basis.

A total of 522 questionaires were mailed to large public library systems (300) in the United States, library associations in the United States and Canada (78), including various divisions of the American Library Association, school (56) and higher education agencies at the state level, as well as federal libraries (40)

The list of libraries and agencies was obtained from various directories, including the Book of the States, the ALA Directory, and the Bowker Annual. The survey instrument, a copy of which is included in the Appendix, was designed to solicit information in areas such as type of funding available, eligibility for receiving funding, procedures for applying, and how institutions publicize the availability of these funds.

Responses included 172 public library systems in 36 states and Washington, D.C., 27 state school library agencies, 29 library associations, and 15 federal libraries. The responses were sorted and organized by state and by type of organization.

Where funds are available in public libraries they are derived from a variety of sources including the regular budget, "Friends" groups, LSCA and private funds. In most cases to be eligible to receive financial help from these libraries individuals must be members of the staff of that library. This is also true for federal libraries. In some cases funds are available for those pursuing graduate library degrees.

State school library agencies generally provide continuing education funding only to residents of the state and at times very specific target groups such as media personnel or administrators are eligible.

A number of library associations do offer continuing education funding. For the most part eligibility depends on membership in the organization.

Few departments of higher education provide funding at all.

It is the Committee's hope that this information will be of help to those individuals who are seeking financial assistance for continuing education and to those institutions seeking to initiate such funding.
